Responsible Business Conduct: The OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises

What business needs to know

Business at OECD (BIAC) represents national business, industry and employer associations from OECD member and observer countries, as well as international sector-specific associate experts. It is the voice of business in OECD policy making processes. The OECD is the world’s foremost purveyor of fact-based policy recommendations and cross cutting statistics.

A Word from the Chair

Business, as represented at the OECD by Business at OECD (BIAC), has long recognized the importance of responsible business conduct in a globalized world. Today, many companies have integrated responsible business conduct into their overall business strategy to manage their activities in a responsible way.

The OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises (MNE Guidelines) are the most comprehensive international instrument for responsible business conduct, which covers all major areas of business ethics. Adhering countries have committed to promote the Guidelines in a global context. They are an integral part of the OECD Declaration on International Investment and Multinational Enterprises, which aims to balance the public policy to promote an open international investment climate with a business commitment to responsible conduct. The MNE Guidelines are already worldwide in use as a reference document.

BIAC considers responsible business conduct as promoted by the MNE Guidelines to be an essential part of an open investment climate and in the best interest of business. To that end, BIAC is committed to work in partnership with the OECD, national governments and multinational enterprises to support effective implementation of the updated Guidelines and promote them in adhering countries and beyond. At the same time, BIAC is involved in close discussions with the OECD to ensure a shared understanding regarding the implementation of the MNE Guidelines. This is especially so for the “specific instances,” which can be brought up by stakeholders at the National Contact Points. BIAC also underlines the need for the MNE Guidelines to remain a practical and manageable tool for MNEs operating in a global environment.

The MNE Guidelines were last updated in 2011 and have since then attracted increased attention from countries and stakeholders around the world. They are fully consistent with the UN Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights developed by John Ruggie. The number of activities promoting the MNE Guidelines is on the rise, as is the number of specific instances. The G20 in 2017 emphasised the importance of the MNE Guidelines and the access to the National Contact Points and recommended further peer reviews and peer learning on the functioning of NCPs. It is therefore indispensable that companies are aware of the MNE Guidelines and their concrete implications. This brochure has been written in response to the demand of the BIAC membership to provide a concise guide for business of key facts they need to know about the MNE Guidelines and the NCP procedure. BIAC is very interested to hear from companies about their experiences with the MNE Guidelines and NCP procedures.

I. The OECD MNE Guidelines – an overview

The MNE Guidelines in brief

- The MNE Guidelines are an international reference document providing recommendations from governments to their MNEs on responsible business conduct at home and abroad. Adhering governments have committed to promote the MNE Guidelines globally.

- The OECD MNE Guidelines are the most comprehensive instrument for promoting responsible business conduct. They provide voluntary principles and standards, covering all major areas of business ethics: human rights, information disclosure, employment and labor, environment, anti-corruption, consumer interests, science and technology, competition and taxation.

- The MNE Guidelines are supported by a unique implementation mechanism of National Contact Points (NCPs) established by adhering governments. The NCP promotes the MNE Guidelines and provides a non-judicial grievance mechanism that can contribute to the resolution of issues that arise in relation to the implementation of the Guidelines. The NCP can offer its good offices to help the parties involved to resolve the issue by facilitating access to mediation and conciliation. It can also issue a statement and make recommendations.

- The MNE Guidelines are part of the 1976 OECD Declaration on International Investment and Multinational Enterprises. The Declaration is an important policy commitment by adhering governments, which balances the promotion by governments of an open international investment climate with a commitment from business to responsible conduct. The Declaration comprises four elements: the MNE Guidelines, the “national treatment” principle, the commitment to minimize conflicting requirements, and the commitment to cooperate in the field of international investment incentives and disincentives.

Why do the MNE Guidelines matter to business?

- The MNE Guidelines provide a comprehensive framework for responsible business conduct. They are based on a consensus view from adhering governments, which also incorporates the input of business, labor and civil society.

- The MNE Guidelines are deliberately not legally enforceable as they are intended to stimulate responsible behavior, not to trigger legal disputes. However, MNEs are expected to fulfil the recommendations set out in the Guidelines and to have a policy in place that is consistent with these recommendations.

- As they provide for an informal complaint mechanism for stakeholders via the National Contact Points, any interested party can call upon the National Contact Point to help parties resolve issues concerning the implementation of the MNE Guidelines by a company in a specific case. The MNE Guidelines are the only international corporate responsibility instrument with such a grievance mechanism.

- At the same time, the MNE Guidelines are not only a demand on business. They also contribute to providing a more level playing field, nationally and internationally, by setting out the standards of responsible behavior that are expected from all MNEs. They also protect business from unrealistic expectations from stakeholders. Expectations that go clearly beyond the Guidelines will not easily be considered justified.
What is a “multinational enterprise”?

- There is no precise definition of a “multinational enterprise” in the Guidelines. MNEs are usually enterprises that are established in several countries and coordinate their operations in various ways. This means that not just any enterprise involved in some international activity is considered an MNE. The Guidelines recognize that international business has transformed significantly over the past decades leading to a broader range of business arrangements and organizational forms, including complex supply chains. The Guidelines apply to all units of an MNE, the parent company and independent business units.

- The Guidelines are not exclusively addressed to large enterprises. They also apply to small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) that are active on a multinational level. But they recognize that SMEs do not have the same capacities as large companies to implement them. While the MNE Guidelines were not developed with the average SMEs in mind, they can nevertheless be a source of inspiration to companies other than MNEs, small or large. Business in general should therefore be familiar with the MNE Guidelines.

Adhering countries: OECD members and other countries

Not only all OECD member countries, but also an increasing number of non-member countries adhere to the MNE Guidelines. They are applicable to MNEs operating in and from these countries. Observance of the Guidelines by these enterprises is thus recommended wherever they operate, not only in adhering countries. In order to create a level playing field, BIAC strongly encourages close cooperation with additional non-member countries.

The essence of the MNE Guidelines: avoid adverse impact

The 2011 MNE Guidelines introduced an important new recommendation: MNEs should avoid adverse impacts of their own business activities in the areas covered by the MNE Guidelines. What does this mean?

- Enterprises should prevent their own activities from causing an adverse impact which may occur when a particular standard from the MNE Guidelines is not being observed. Enterprises should also avoid substantially contributing to any such adverse impact. ‘Their own activities’ also include activities in the supply chain; however, some meaningful involvement of the MNE in the activity is then required.

- MNEs should seek to prevent or mitigate adverse impacts by a business relationship when this impact is directly related to the MNE’s operations, products or services. This is the case even when the MNE itself did not directly contribute to those impacts. The practical implications of this provision are not yet fully clear and are subject to debate. However, the MNE Guidelines explicitly state that this recommendation does not shift the responsibility from the party that commits the infringement to the MNE with which it has a business relationship. Furthermore, MNEs should encourage their business partners to uphold the principles of the Guidelines.

- Thus, there are 4 degrees of avoiding adverse impact:
  » do not cause
  » do not substantially contribute
  » seek to prevent or mitigate adverse impacts of your business relationships
  » encourage your business partners to apply the Guidelines’ principles

The Guidelines are clearly based on the principle that MNEs are responsible for their own behavior and not for the adverse impacts purely caused by others. The MNE Guidelines are more demanding depending on how directly or substantially the enterprise is involved in the adverse impact:

- When the MNE is causing the adverse impact, it should take all necessary steps to stop or prevent it.

- When the MNE is contributing to the problem alongside with others, it should stop or prevent its own contribution, and it should use its influence to reduce any remaining impacts by others, as far as practically possible.

- When a business relationship is causing an adverse impact, the MNE should use its leverage on this relationship to influence it or prevent the adverse impact.

- Last but not least, enterprises are generally expected to encourage their business partners to behave responsibly by applying standards of corporate conduct in line with the MNE Guidelines.

How to avoid adverse impact: due diligence and flexibility

- Enterprises should carry out due diligence to avoid adverse impact. This means that they should introduce a process to identify, prevent, reduce, and account for how they address actual and potential adverse impacts.

- The MNE Guidelines provide no general procedural requirements for due diligence, and three chapters of the MNE Guidelines are exempt from the due diligence requirement: Science and Technology, Competition, and Taxation. However, the MNE Guidelines provide more elaborate requirements specifically for human rights due diligence in line with the UN Guiding Principles for Business and Human Rights. In addition, the OECD is in the process of developing a general due diligence guidance.

Flexibility is an important concept in the MNE Guidelines. The nature and extent of due diligence depends on the precise circumstances:

- The Guidelines recognize that the encouragement of business partners to comply with the recommendations is subject to practical limitations depending on the specific circumstances.

- Depending on the circumstances, in case a business partner causes an adverse impact, it can be appropriate for the MNE to either continue the relationship while addressing the problem, suspend the relationship temporarily or, as a means of last resort, disengage, while taking into account social and economic consequences.

- When enterprises have many business partners, in some cases tens of thousands, they are encouraged to identify global areas of activity in which the risk of adverse effects is greatest, and to determine priorities for due diligence towards suppliers on the basis of this risk assessment.

- It is explicitly recognized that the expectations are different for large MNEs and for small MNEs, due to their different capacities for implementation.

What happens if national law contradicts the recommendations of the MNE Guidelines?

- The first duty of MNEs is to comply with applicable law of the countries where they operate.

- The MNE Guidelines do not take precedence over national laws and provisions.

- Where national laws and provisions conflict with the Guidelines, enterprises should look to comply with the Guidelines to the fullest extent possible without contravening the applicable law of the country.
II. Implementation of the MNE Guidelines: the Role of National Contact Points

What is the National Contact Point?

Each adhering government has to establish a National Contact Point, which has the following tasks:

- Increase awareness of the MNE Guidelines and promote their implementation.
- Respond to questions regarding the implementation of the MNE Guidelines.
- Contribute, as non-judicial grievance mechanism, to the resolution of issues that arise in relation to the implementation of the Guidelines. The NCP can offer its good offices to help the parties involved to resolve the issues by providing a platform for mediation and conciliation. It can also issue a statement or make recommendations.

While adhering governments have substantial flexibility as to how they organize their NCP, they have to respect the procedural guidance of the MNE Guidelines and follow the core criteria, including visibility, accessibility, transparency, and accountability.

The NCP specific instance procedure

- The NCP procedure is intended to resolve an issue in case of alleged non-observance of the Guidelines by an MNE. It should be stressed that normally the implementation of the Guidelines does not give rise to disagreements. However, in case a disagreement arises, these “specific instances” can be “notified” by interested parties to the NCP. The notifying stakeholders are mainly NGOs and trade unions, but any group or individual with an interest at stake can bring up a “specific instance” with an NCP.

- The NCP’s good offices may be called upon by individual stakeholders when they feel an enterprise is causing an adverse impact or is otherwise not acting in accordance with the MNE Guidelines. In such a case, the stakeholder(s) can request the NCP to assist in finding for the issue(s) raised a mutually agreeable, future-oriented solution. Many of the norms and standards included in the MNE Guidelines are in many countries also regulated on the basis of domestic legislation and can therefore lead to legal proceedings in case of non-compliance. But through the NCP, enterprises and their stakeholders may find a solution in a more constructive and accessible manner than via a court.

- When an NCP decides to examine an ‘issue’, this should by no means be construed as implying that the NCP suspects the MNE of having failed to observe the Guidelines. Any communication of the NCP on this point should be very clear, as public reports on issues under examination can cause reputational damage, even if serious non-observance is subsequently not established. It occurs regularly in NCP procedures that no infringement is identified. Questions are usually dealt with by the NCP of the country where the issue has occurred. If the issue has come up in a non-adhering country, the NCP of the home country of the MNE is usually approached.

1 The terms ‘notify’ and ‘specific instance’ were chosen to make clear also in the terminology that the NCP procedure is not a legal procedure (which would use terms such as ‘complaint’ and ‘case’).
In some countries the administration has decided to give additional effect to NCP statements if specific business conduct has not been in line with the Guidelines. Thus certain export credit agencies take NCP statements into account when deciding on providing credit. And in one country, the refusal by a business to participate in a “good offices” effort bars that business from getting government support in economic diplomacy. However these are national policy decisions which are not based on the OECD Guidelines.

Phase 1: Initial assessment

- During the initial assessment phase, the NCP informs the parties involved about the substance of the issue that has been brought up. Based on the initial assessment, a decision is taken on whether the questions that were raised merit a more detailed examination. The issue must be related to the MNE Guidelines and be adequately substantiated. It should be brought up by a party with a justified interest in the contentious issue.

- The NCP will apply a good faith test before accepting to examine a case: there should be a genuine problem, and there should be a genuine willingness of the notifying party to resolve the issue by entering into a mediation process. The NCP can invite the MNE to provide its views early in the process. The MNE can also express its views at its own initiative.

- If the case is rejected, the NCP informs the parties of the reasons for its decision. A statement will be made publicly available after consultation with the parties. The NCP can decide not to publish the name of the company. The indicative timeframe for the initial assessment is 3 months.

Phase 2: Good offices

- When a case is accepted, the NCP contacts the parties involved to offer its assistance in resolving the issues and conducts consultations with the parties. It is understood that good offices can only be provided when the parties concerned agree to it. The parties’ commitment to participate in good faith is a crucial element. NCPs are expected to take appropriate steps to protect sensitive information and the interests of stakeholders involved. Confidentiality of the proceedings will be maintained during good offices. Parties can make agreements on whether, and if so how, they communicate on the procedure.

- The NCP offers the parties a neutral discussion forum and mediation platform. A comprehensive written statement is usually required from the enterprise in question. Participation in the NCP procedure provides enterprises with the possibility to make their point of view heard and, in case a relevant issue was raised, to search together with stakeholders for a solution.

- The NCP can ask the formal advice of the OECD Investment Committee in case there is a specific question related to the interpretation of the MNE Guidelines. The indicative timeframe of the second phase is 6-12 months.
Phase 3: Conclusion

- If the parties reach an agreement on the issue that was raised, the procedure can be closed and the NCP will prepare a final report in coordination with the parties involved. The final report of the procedure is made public, unless confidentiality is deemed in the interest of effective implementation of the MNE Guidelines or needed to protect sensitive business information.

- If the parties do not agree on a resolution at the conclusion, the NCP will also issue a statement and can make recommendations. The parties are in principle free to communicate about the issues after the procedure. However, information and views provided during the proceedings by another party involved will remain confidential, unless that other party agrees to their disclosure or this would be contrary to the provisions of national law.

- The NCP will also issue a statement and can make recommendations in case a party is unwilling to participate. The practice of some NCPs to conclude the procedure with a judgment on the merits of the notification is not explicitly mentioned in the MNE Guidelines.

- The statements and the recommendations of the NCP can suggest changes in the behavior of the enterprise in case, but they can also conclude that there was no infringement of the Guidelines. By participating in the procedure and making its point of view clear, the enterprise may create the best conditions for a favorable outcome, or for finding a solution to the issue raised together with stakeholders. The indicative timeframe of the third phase calls on the NCP to issue its statement or report within three months after the conclusion of the procedure.

Assisting parties to resolve an issue is the essence of the NCP procedure. It is not a semi-legal procedure, nor is the NCP an enforcement agency.

The task of the NCP is to assist parties in coming to an agreement on resolving an issue and to promote business behavior that is compatible with the Guidelines. NCPs should stress this in their external communication and choose their words carefully.
How to deal with the Guidelines, how to implement them, how to comply?

• The MNE Guidelines are a set of principles of expected behavior. They are a benchmark, with room for interpretation and flexibility.

• While the Guidelines are not compulsory, companies are expected to implement them. However, there is no comprehensive manual available on how to comply with the details concerning the issues raised in the Guidelines.

• Proper due diligence and risk management are dynamic processes that may require dialogue with stakeholders. It is an ongoing process, as views in society evolve.

• Collaboration with other companies that encounter the same issue(s) is often more effective than trying to address an issue individually, although care must be taken not to break anti-trust legislation.

• In large enterprises it may prove useful to enhance internal cooperation between divisions, e.g. business development, procurement, compliance, social engagement and (external) communication.
III. The Proactive Agenda

What is the proactive agenda?
The proactive agenda was introduced in the 2011 update. It is intended to contribute to the avoidance of problems in a proactive way and in a broader context than the specific instance procedures.

The proactive agenda aims to promote the effective observance of the Guidelines by helping enterprises identify and respond to risks of adverse impacts associated with particular products, regions, sectors or industries before adverse impacts actually occur.

It is based on a multi-stakeholder process, which gives business and key stakeholders the opportunity to participate in discussions to develop strategies to avoid risks of adverse impacts. BIAC experts actively participate in these discussions, alongside NCPs, trade unions and civil society representatives.

Key business considerations for the proactive agenda

- The proactive agenda is not intended to create any additional responsibilities beyond the 2011 MNE Guidelines agreement.
- The objective of any proactive agenda dialogue is to take stock of existing information and develop practical tools that assist companies in performing due diligence to avoid adverse impacts.
- The choice of specific projects is demand-driven, seeks to avoid duplication, carries the support of all relevant parties, and its development relies on a multi-stakeholder process via an ad-hoc advisory group of interested stakeholders.
IV. How business contributes to strategic discussions on the Guidelines

Key business messages regarding the MNE Guidelines

- The specific instance procedure should be approached as a learning process: Basic principles and quality criteria should be taken into account by all NCPs, and best practices should be exchanged. NCPs, business and stakeholders will get the best result if they adopt a constructive approach focusing on responsible business conduct and not an adversarial legal approach.

- Ensure a shared view of all stakeholders of the NCP procedure: The purpose of the NCP procedure is to help parties to work constructively on the basis of facts and trust towards a common future-oriented solution to the advantage of all parties. While in some cases the NCP procedure has led to a meaningful dialogue and to the solution of disagreement, the fundamental nature of the NCP procedure has at times been disregarded, thus complicating the efforts to find a solution. The OECD and NCPs should ensure that the NCP procedure is presented as an offer of good offices to help parties find a solution. The initiation of a specific instance procedure does not automatically imply that a company has failed to observe the MNE Guidelines.

- Avoid an excessively broad interpretation: There needs to be a clear understanding of the reasonable limitations for an MNE to change third parties’ conduct when seeking to avoid or mitigate adverse impacts in a specific business context. The Guidelines need to remain a practical and manageable tool for MNEs, which is also important to facilitate their acceptance in non-OECD-member countries. Seeking to prevent or mitigate an adverse impact to which an enterprise is only linked by a business relationship does not intend to shift the responsibility from the entity causing the adverse impact to the enterprise with which it has a business relationship. This must also be reflected in the OECD guidances on due diligence.

- Key considerations for the “proactive agenda”: The proactive agenda is essentially an approach to develop, on the basis of the 2011 Guidelines, practical tools for addressing specific challenges, with a view to addressing potential future risks. However, it should be understood that the proactive agenda must not create new responsibilities or recommendations beyond the Guidelines and that it should not create prescriptive sector guidance that would exceed the 2011 agreement.

- Foster global engagement: With the shift of weight in the world economy, it is more important than ever to expand the geographical coverage of the Guidelines and promote implementation of the standards of the Guidelines by non-adhering countries. These countries should give serious consideration to endorsing the Guidelines, which will also contribute to creating a favorable investment environment. It is important that every country fulfils its commitment to put in place an adequately functioning NCP. Countries cannot reasonably expect business to comply with the Guidelines if there is no adequately functioning NCP in place.

- The Guidelines as part of the OECD Declaration on International Investment and MNEs: The discussion on facilitating adherence to the MNE Guidelines without adherence to the OECD Declaration raises a number of strategic issues, each of which much be carefully considered on a case-by-case basis. While BIAC strongly supports adherence to the MNE Guidelines by additional non-member countries, it must not be forgotten that the Guidelines are part of a package and a mutual commitment. The Declaration commits adhering countries to improve the investment climate, while companies are encouraged to apply the standards of responsible business conduct as elaborated in the Guidelines.
Issues requiring further attention

- How should businesses carry out due diligence in an adequate way in concrete cases?
- What is the scope of MNEs’ responsibilities in the supply chain and other forms of business relationships?
- How do these business responsibilities relate to governments’ obligations, e.g. in the field of good governance?
- What are the precise implications for SMEs?
- How should the specific problem-solving character of the NCP be better communicated so that all stakeholders see real added value in the system?
- Should there be an additional possibility specifically for companies to raise an “issue” with an NCP in case of inappropriate behavior of local stakeholders?
- How can sector-specific projects support existing frameworks while minimizing duplication of efforts and providing practical added value?
- How can the worldwide application of standards on responsible business conduct be further promoted for an international level playing field?
- What should be the conditions for countries that seek to adhere to the MNE Guidelines without wishing to adhere to the OECD Declaration on International Investment and MNEs?

In summary

- The OECD MNE Guidelines are recommendations on responsible business conduct in society.
- The recommendations are quite overarching and contain a large degree of flexibility for implementation.
- The central concept is to avoid adverse impacts.
- To this end, MNEs should develop due diligence processes.
- The MNE Guidelines are voluntary, but governments are committed to promote implementation and MNEs are expected to act in accordance with the Guidelines.
- The National Contact Points can offer their good offices in specific instance procedures to help resolve differences arising in the implementation of the Guidelines. NCPs can also issue statements and make recommendations.
- Implementing the MNE Guidelines is an ongoing learning process and benefits from a dialogue with key stakeholders involved.
Business at OECD (BIAC), the official channel to the OECD

As the officially recognized voice of business to the OECD, BIAC participates several times per year in consultations with the OECD Investment Committee and its Working Group on Responsible Business Conduct, which oversee MNE Guidelines related issues at the OECD, as well as the annual OECD Global Forum on Responsible Business Conduct.

During these meetings and consultations, BIAC - alongside TUAC (representing trade unions) and OECD Watch (a network of civil society organizations) - provides active input to strategic questions that are being discussed with regard to the functioning of the specific instance procedure, strategic questions regarding the implementation of the MNE Guidelines, the proactive agenda, and outreach activities.

BIAC also solicits member business associations and/or individual companies to participate in relevant advisory groups, including sector-specific proactive agenda projects.

Who to contact for information and advice

We encourage companies that are interested in contributing to the strategic discussions concerning the MNE Guidelines or BIAC activities on investment and responsible business conduct more broadly to contact their respective national BIAC member organization.
